

The Grove House — student cultural center and focal point on the Pitzer Campus — offers a respite from daily concerns and academic pressures. Quiet conversations; reading or writing; cultural events, such as musical performances or poetry readings; a women's center; and simple food are all part of the Grove House experience.

Once the Zetterberg family home in Claremont, California, this historic Craftsman-style bungalow was moved to Pitzer in 1977 and placed in its present location in 1979. Framing the house are attractive gardens and an arboretum, whose drought-tolerant plants, many native to the area, comprise an ongoing ecology research project.

During the past ten years, the House has undergone major restoration, including furnishing true to the period. Today the Grove House is fully functional thanks to Pitzer supporters, faculty, graduates and students.
