

ON "TIME"

A student and three faculty members elaborate upon statements they made in a recent Time article on Pitzer College.

"...the hardest part is that there is nothing concrete to hold on to," said Taffy Squires '67. She adds, "At Pitzer, we are establishing our own tradition and attempting to create the best possible form of government. Although this often results in frustration, it also affords the individual an opportunity to grow as Pitzer grows and to expand her knowledge of people and herself."

"Education is the destruction of innocence," said George Park, Associate Professor of Anthropology. He elaborates, "It is a sad truth that, inevitably, education is the destruction of innocence. It is a sadder fact that the world we live in is not safe for the innocent. But the sorriest truth is this: Innocence in power is today the greatest danger to us all."

"Right now the girls don't know the difference between social work and social science," said Assistant Professor of Anthropology Lee Munroe. He explains, "An interest in the behavior of mankind may be pursued in many ways. Basic is an understanding of the causes of human behavior. A student trained in the social sciences will be prepared not only for scientific research on human behavior, but also for assisting in the betterment of humanity."

"There is newness here without risk," stated Classics Instructor Stephen Glass. He adds, "Pitzer is in the fortunate position of having many of its responsibilities backed up by the already existing Claremont Colleges. In such a happy circumstance Pitzer is relatively free to experiment. Thus the timidity one has come to expect in a new venture has been largely erased by the support of the Group Plan."
